I want to know which rows of a database are being updated by a specific user, we use PHP and i want to know the query result by number of rows. A: You can write a trigger which will throw an error if any record is changed by an unwanted user. DELIMITER $$ CREATE TRIGGER tgr_table_update BEFORE UPDATE ON table1 FOR EACH ROW BEGIN IF OLD.user!=NEW.user THEN SIGNAL SQLSTATE '45000' SET MESSAGE_TEXT = 'Illegal action'; END IF; END $$ DELIMITER ; Q: Adding an "Update" functionality to a UITableView in iOS Is it possible to add a UITableView with a "update" functionality to update the data inside the table as the user changes the content of a UITextField? I'm pretty sure that I'd need to keep a back-end copy somewhere and get the "latest" version from there, but I'm not really sure where to start, if the UITableView is the best way to go or is there something else? A: There are two ways to do it. If you're using a standard controller (and all of your table data is static, and the only thing you're trying to update is the visibility of rows) you can just call reloadData. If you have dynamic data, or you're just trying to update a single field (such as the current row's contents) you can use a UITableViewDataSource (with a custom class and your own delegate methods) to update the existing table whenever the text field changes.
