During its existence, the newspaper published in West Arlington, an area annexed during the late 19th century, and Arlington County. Founding and early issues The newspaper began as a weekly newspaper, first published on July 1, 1882. It was founded and published by Thomas A. Scott, a former Civil War Union Army officer and the former editor of the Washington City Guardian, a Republican paper published in Washington, D.C. Scott served as the first editor of the newspaper. The inaugural issue appeared a week after Arlington County was formed. In addition to the newspaper, Scott founded the Arlington Daily, which was published in northern Arlington. The Arlington Daily published a separate page in the Arlington Intelligencer that focused on Union Army veterans. The new city and county boundaries and Arlington's rapid growth changed the scope of the newspaper and how it was published. Instead of being published on a weekly basis, the newspaper was renamed the Arlington Intelligencer in 1885. The newspaper was no longer published in northern Arlington. Scott shifted the newspaper's focus to the southern half of the city of Arlington, since that was where the majority of its readers lived. The newspaper moved from a unionally Republican paper to a staunchly ba244e880a
