Q: How to properly form a query that joins on multiple tables with Django ORM? I have been working on the following query, which gets an array of student loans, with the loans belonging to a specific school or college. `var loans = Loans.objects.filter(school__slug=SCHOOL_SLUG)` `var query = loans.filter(id=LOAN_ID).order_by('-date_paid')` The loan is to be paid to this query: `def pay(loan): school =`

School.objects.all().first() if loan.school == school: student = Student.objects.all().first() pay_loan(loan, student) else:
print('NO RELATION') pay_loan(loan, student) The issue with the above code is that it won't work if there are multiple loans to the same school. Here are the models: class Loan(models.Model): borrower = models.ForeignKey( Student, related_name='borrower',
on_delete=models.CASCADE,
null=True, editable=False) school

---

= models.ForeignKey( School, related_name='school',
on_delete=models.CASCADE,
null=True, editable=False) date_paid = models.DateField(default=None, null=True) status = models.IntegerField(default=0) class School(models.Model): slug = models.SlugField(max_length=2 00, unique=True) name = models.
CharField(max_length=200)
faculty = models.CharField

I bought my first car with $85,000. Here's how to earn $100,000 in 2.5 years - jseliger ===== mindcrime I don't know the author of this piece, but I was genuinely surprised and kind of glad when I read this. It's amazing to me how many millions (and millions...) of people still spend $50 - $100 a month on an infrequent luxury when they could really be doing something that would have them much better off. And yet, that seems to be pretty common. I hope the day never comes when cars, and the whole "drive yourself to work" thing, become a rarity. I grew up in a house where both parents worked full time, and we could not afford to buy a brand-new car, so we drove used cars. Then I got a full-time job, and we couldn't afford to buy a used car. By that time we had a twin-turbocharged fire-breathing monster of a V8 Dodge Ram "Necessity" Rover/Hummer built from a Class C that my dad had bought for

---

$500 and restored. We kept that for decades. If the car analogy here is valid, I'm sure that if every single car in the world were driven by a hoard of 1%'ers, their cars would be as strange, silly, tragically fragile, and expensive as the few weird-but-amazing supercars that exist. _sob_ Q: Methods for comparing two (possibly big) datasets Is there a standard approach for comparing two datasets (e.g. if the difference between two sets of data is significant?), as in analyzing and interpreting statistics and results from survey data. I was wondering if there are some methods known in the literature, e.g., in terms of the most common types of data, the most common methods, or anything else that people commonly use. Background: I am a new grad student, where I need to analyze data in a doctoral research. I find that the most common approach is to find differences between the data sets, and not checking whether these differences are really significant

---
