Comments: 21 Posted by: alvarez at 11:49 AM PST on Sunday, January 31, 2009 As a loyal reader of your blog, I'd like to suggest something about the bumbling police in that British attack that always winds up with the guy on the ground with his hands up. We all know that means he's under arrest. We also know that the British cops don't do the right thing. Why? Because it's a protocol. I suggest that the protocol is: 1. British cops don't arrest people on the ground. 2. British cops don't yell at or hit other cops. 3. British cops don't detain a suspect for 5 hours, when it's obvious he didn't have time to throw a bomb. 4. British cops don't kick the suspect in the head. OK, the first three come from personal experience. The last is from the depositions of three other witnesses. Even though the suspect was being questioned by a 7-year-old, he had to be told he wasn't under arrest and could leave when the escort arrived. This happened in Hamburg. It was the year of the Olympics and the police were under pressure to get the case done before the Olympics started. Now how is it that this bumbling idiot cop didn't know that? A group of Democratic presidential contenders and members of Congress denounced the Trump administration's immigration policies on Friday, saying they have stripped children of their due process rights. The Democratic presidential hopefuls — who include Sens. Bernie Sanders and Kamala Harris, both of whom dropped out of the race earlier this month — joined the chorus of condemnation over the Trump administration's border policies, which have included separating children from parents and placing migrant families in detention facilities. They criticized the administration's "zero tolerance" policy that resulted in the family separations and said that when they are removed from the United States, "children should not 6a5afdab4c
