I'm trying to make TextArea's width: to be equal to the width of the container. But it doesn't work. I have this code: HTML: JavaScript: var inputdata = document.getElementById("inputdata"); inputdata.style.width = "100%"; Here is the test : A: I think I found your problem : Inputdata is your textarea and not the text you want to show. So you need to change the CSS on the textarea : textarea { background: #ccc; padding: 10px; width: 100%; } I'm not too sure I've understood your question, however this works :) Inflammatory response in a canine model of ventricular assist device-induced thromboembolism. Implantation of a ventricular assist device (VAD) induces the activation of coagulation and inflammation that may contribute to thrombotic complications during VAD support. Limited data suggest that adverse effects of inflammatory response may contribute to detrimental effects of VAD-induced thromboembolism. The purpose of this study was to evaluate the systemic procoagulant and inflammatory responses in a canine model with different timing of VAD implantation and duration of implantation. A self-expandable VAD
