A partial list of the capabilities in Elements include the following: * Raster images * JPEG, TIFF, and similar raster images * Color, grayscale, and black-and-white * Layer functions, including the following: * Fade * Opacity and Effects * Blur * Inner and Outer Glow * Gradient Overlay * Gradient Map * Layer Mask * Colorize Black and White * Compositing * Printing and publishing * 3D and advanced effects * Animation * Color and Black-and-White Adjustment layers * Gradients * Drop shadow * Effects * Text effects * Drawing tools * Web publishing * Video * Graphics, animation, and photo projects * Layout projects * Bookmark (for later use) The types of changes you can make using Elements are broad, ranging from removing a dark area of a picture to creating an entire graphic. Q: How to access an inherited method from a parent class I got a User interface. Let's say this is a child of my System interface (I am using Dependency Injection). I got a factory method like this: public static IUser Create(UserOptions parameters) { User user =... UserParameters userParameters =... user.setParameters(userParameters); return user; } This methods contains some parameters like logon and password. Because the user should always have the same parameters, I made it as an abstract base class, so I can extend one of my own implementations of IUser later. public abstract class UserParameters : IUserParameters { ... // All my params public abstract IUser Create(); } Here IUser is all methods which will actually be used. And as a child IUser I now want to pass a created user to the abstract user creation. public interface IUser : IDisposable, IUserParameters { IUser Create(); void SetParameters(UserParameters parameters); } How can I access the Create method to set the parameters of my user object in this current class (and hopefully also in its childs)? To make it even more difficult, we got also multiple areas of our application which use the IUser interface now. And it's important that the methods in the base class create the same object over and over again. Update 2 I ended up solving it like this: Create(UserOptions userOptions) : base(userOptions.Logon, userOptions.Password) { parameters = _userParameters.Create(); } A: I guess you could pass your UserParameters as a parameter to the base constructor. This would definitely solve the problem for how to prevent the same instance from being created with the same parameters. It is a little bit of a ugliness though: public interface IUser : IDisposable, IUserParameters { IUser Create(); void SetParameters(IUserParameters parameters); } public abstract class UserParameters : IUserParameters { public UserParameters() { } ... // All my params

Rep. Steve Cohen doesn't think he's doing anything wrong if he sets up meetings with female lobbyists in order to get what he wants from them. That's the way he's been doing it, using his position as a congressman to grease the wheels on legislation. In all fairness to Cohen, this is probably the most effective, and best, way to have a conversation with a woman who might have some say over an issue. But … what if he isn't asking questions about important issues? What if he's using this to work for him? If this is all he's doing, he's taking advantage of his position. If he's doing it because he genuinely is interested in the issues she's asked about, he's still taking advantage, but by being gracious and respectful, he's allowed his office to be seen as a welcoming environment. So that's a plus. What I don't understand is this: in today's political environment, do a lot of lobbyists want to associate themselves with Cohen for fear that it will turn them into something out of "Men In Black"? He says he's just having a conversation and that this isn't salacious. Well, sure. He could ask anything he wanted, right? But it's kind of his job. Does he have a problem with this?
