of 15-crown-5-dipropionic acid to aluminosilicate minerals--A new class of nonionic and amphoteric surfactants. We describe the site-specific adsorption of a novel class of surfactants,

15-crown-5-dipropionic acid (15CAP), to the hydronium- and sodium-bearing montmorillonite minerals. In addition to their high surface activity, 15CAP possess nonionic and amphoteric properties: surface activity is close to zero below pH 3, is pH-independent above pH 10, and is independent of both ionic strength and temperature. The fraction of the adsorbed surfactant that is not exchangeable on first contact decreases as the volume of the mineral phase increases. However, up to approximately 80 wt% of the surface-active sites are occupied on single-layer adsorption. Changes in the total surface area of the adsorbents are small with respect to exchangeable surfactant. Surface excess increases with increasing mineral volume. The competition between 15CAP and sodium dodecyl sulfate (SDS) indicates that 15CAP and other adsorbed surfactants show a similar site-specific adsorption. Energies of adsorption of
