A strong and stable micro-EMC-DPSS based intraocular implanted waveguide optical system for focusing and imaging applications. An intraocular implanted waveguide optical system (SWO) has been developed based on micro-electromechanical systems (MEMS) technology. In this paper, a micro-EMC-DPSS (Direct-push Schlieren) based waveguide optical focusing system (WOFS) was demonstrated. Two hexagonal apertures were formed on the top surface of the substrate and the micro-DPSS was placed at the center of the aperture. The light diverges from the apertures and propagates into the patient's eye through the SWO. The Schlieren images were obtained with a liquid-crystal mirror (LCM). We also developed a blue-violet Coherent Crystal (ZnS:Cu) RGB (red, green, and blue) array, which was integrated into the SWO. The light emitting diode (LED) array was formed by  $2 \times 3$  sub-arrays in a spiral pattern for the RGB system. We used a confocal laser scanning microscope (CLSM) as the light source and spectral imaging function to measure the spectral properties of the LED array. We optimized the intensity distribution, incident angle, and acceptance angle of the SWO to obtain maximal resolution. Through a series of clinical tests, the power density at the retinal surface was estimated to be approximately  $0.45 \text{ mW/cm}^2$ . The resolution of the system was estimated to be approximately  $2.8 \mu\text{m}$  for a power density at the retinal surface of  $0.45 \text{ mW/cm}^2$ . These parameters are enough for therapeutic purposes. The depth of the focus is approximately  $10 \mu\text{m}$  and can be limited to the subretinal space by using an LCM. The lens-based SWO was implanted into the subretinal space of a patient, and the size of the focus point was clearly visible through the confocal image. The proposed system achieved ultrahigh resolution and was able to image the RPE layer of the eye with subcellular resolution. Q: Z-index of image when looking through a glass I have a piece of glass which I want to use as an object. It's positioned so that everything underneath it is completely covered. Here's a picture: This is what it looks like in 3D: Now, I want to add an image on top of

BRCA1, P53 and Kras gene mutations in adenocarcinomas of the breast. About 0.3% to 4% of breast cancers occur in relatives of patients with the hereditary form of breast cancer. We studied 70 tumors from 65 patients with early-onset (before age 50 years) breast cancer by denaturing gradient gel electrophoresis and direct sequencing, using a panel of breast tumor genes. The prevalence of BRCA1 and P53 mutations was 10% (7 of 70) and 14% (10 of 70), respectively. Codon 183 (AGC-->cAGC) of the Kras gene was mutated in 1 patient. Our data indicate that P53 mutations may occur more commonly in familial breast cancer than previously reported, and that there is limited overlap of the various molecular genetic alterations. Our study also demonstrates that direct sequencing is an effective and reliable method for the identification of BRCA1, P53 and Kras mutations in breast cancer. Missouri Counties Trying To Convince Each Other Public Testing Is A Bad Idea February 11th, 2020 by Tina Casey The rollback of the Environmental Protection Agency's MATS/GATS regulations has opened the door to a veritable smorgasbord of alternative fuel vehicle proposals. This includes the BEV, CNEV, HBEV, and H2BEV "hybrids." (Technically, hybrids are a much broader category than BEVs and CNEVs.) If one alternative fuel idea floats your boat, you can check out the rollback timeline for a good summary, or just catch up on the progress as it unfolds in these two US counties. And if you're not concerned with lobbying efforts, you can instead simply pay attention to the local clean air denizens who are just plain angry at the Trump White House for taking away these standards without a full picture of what it would mean for their own communities. Missouri Counties In Motion According to the Missouri Air Conservation Commission, the territory that includes St. Louis County and the rural Ozark Mountain region near Rolla has granted 53 permits to private test sites. All are part of the Clean Energy Vehicle Consortium. Five sites in St. Louis are registered with the city, which offers the potential for more sites, as it becomes feasible for the private companies to open up additional locations. The goal is to create "one-stop shops" ♦
