Q: Getting Joomla to use the internal or external CSS I've got a Joomla project where I'm trying to change the default style of the administration interface of a component. In the XML I've managed to override the default style so that it doesn't look so bad, but what I want to do is use a theme which by default looks nice, and Joomla uses the theme when it's default one, but I can't find out how to tell it to use the theme instead of the Joomla's default one. A: The best way I've found to change the style of the administration screen is by modifying the params.php file of your admin/ directory. There is a $option variable defined and it's a multidimensional array. Under the admin/ folder, you can modify this $option variable and re-use those changes for whatever you're doing with your custom admin screen. There is quite a good article here on how to do that. Koparina, Borås Koparina is a locality in Borås Municipality, Västra Götaland County, Sweden. I'm planning to spray several beds of flowers and I'm trying to find something that is non-toxic, relatively non-toxic, and kills ant. The leaves and crowns look like this to me - A: I have used the spray insecticide that is actually ethanol in this situation and it works fairly well. It does take a while for some weeds and such to die but it is fairly straightforward and is fairly effective. I even used it to

Reduced glucose metabolism in rat brain, heart and kidney after 3-nitropropionic acid administration: a (18)F-FDG-PET study. Glucose metabolism in rats was assessed by means of (18)F-fluorodeoxyglucose positron emission tomography (FDG-PET). This non-invasive method provides an excellent means of assessing brain glucose metabolism in rodents and for measurement of the regional glucose metabolism in the whole animal. The aim of this study was to determine if 3-nitropropionic acid (3-NPA), a toxicant known to damage in vitro mitochondrial complex II, would lead to a regional reduction in blood glucose metabolism in vivo. 3-NPA (10 mg/kg ip) was injected into rats 60 min prior to a bolus of (18)F-FDG (370 MBq) and imaged 60 min after injection. Coronal images were obtained. Region of interest (ROI) volumes (caudate putamen, pons, thalamus, whole brain, heart, kidney) were defined. Fractional distribution volume corrected (DVC) for each ROI was calculated using a two-tissue compartmental model. In addition, in control animals, the (18)F-FDG accumulation was calculated and plotted against time and between-animal radioactivity equivalent blood flow per gram tissue. The FDG accumulation in the whole brain of control animals was higher than that reported in the literature, and declined with time, a finding that can be attributed to regional tissue glucose accumulation. The regional brain metabolism data and blood flow data are consistent with the known pattern of brain function. None of the ROI's showed significant statistical differences between the 3-NPA-treated and control animals. The regional brain metabolism was unaffected by 3-NPA-induced mitochondrial complex II inhibition.Many different types of electrical connectors are known, and typically include one or more terminals having a mating end to be received by a mating connector. In particular, for connectors used in vehicular applications such as connecting electrical signals between two batteries and/or between a battery and a load, it is desirable that the connectors be capable of a modular, plug-and-play configuration where the mating ends of a plurality of individual connectors may be inserted into a single mating end of another connector. This is particularly true for connectors used in vehicles, such as hybrid vehicles, because it is desirable to enable an individual battery or other power source to be directly
