The membrane permeability properties of a room temperature stable phospholipid/monoolein/cholesterol complex. We have developed a room temperature stable and thermally reversible complex composed of 1,2-dimyristoyl-sn-glycero-3-phosphocholine (DMPC), monoolein (MO), and cholesterol (CHOL) and studied its interactions with liposomes prepared from 1,2-dioleoyl-sn-glycero-3-phosphocholine (DOPC). Differential scanning calorimetry (DSC) and X-ray diffraction (XRD) studies have shown that a lipid-like complex is formed at room temperature. Complex formation results in the formation of a high-melting, gel-like phase and a lower-melting, liquid-crystalline-like phase. Liposome formation results in shifting of the transitions to higher temperatures. Electron spin resonance (ESR) studies have demonstrated that these particles have a relatively large inner diameter and a planar lipid bilayer core. Large unilamellar liposomes were prepared by sonication to produce liposomes having radii in the range of 100-200 nm. ESR measurements were performed on the liposomes at various temperatures as a function of lipid composition. ESR studies on liposomes of increasing sizes indicate that the membrane permeability depends on membrane curvature and that liposomes in the range of 100-200 nm are larger than normal liposomes and have increased permeability relative to normal liposomes. The permeability is dependent on the presence and relative concentrations of DMPC, MO, and CHOL. The permeability does not increase with size, which suggests that it is in some way related to lipid mobility in the gel phase or the thickness of the hydrophobic lipid bilayer.

Q: manually update a value in array of objects in ReactJS
I know I can use onChange event to update the value and re-render the component, but I want to change a value when the page renders so I tried the below and it didn't work.

What's New In Photoshop 2022 (version 23)?

Leading storage and retrieval company Symix has launched a pilot program with encrypted cloud storage service ShareFile, with a view to converting a significant proportion of its data into the new format. Sydney-based Symix will use ShareFile, part of the Microsoft-led SkyDrive service, to upgrade one of its major data sources. "If it succeeds, this will be rolled out to many more of Symix's legacy sources," Symix CTO Wayne Bailey said. With SkyDrive, users have the option of encrypting any files stored in the cloud, so that access to any documents stored therein is restricted to the owner of that file. Other users could access that file only through another device that has been granted access to it. The company will use ShareFile's integrated encryption with a 256-bit AES algorithm. "With Apple's launch of iOS6, we want to make sure that our customer's data stays on a native platform where it is protected," Bailey said. "It's obvious that local data storage is vulnerable and [that] if you have an unprotected device, you're leaving all of your data open to access. The same thing is true if you give information away by distributing files with a USB [key] or a shared file system." Like Apple, Symix will work with partner SkyDrive to secure data. The company also wants to complement this move with native Microsoft apps, both for Windows Mobile and OS X. "Our goal is to be the first and the last place you go to access your files," Bailey said. ShareFile allows users to upload, download, copy and synchronize files from the cloud directly from the Web browser. "All of our clients were using the Web version and nothing was shown on their computers," he said. "SkyDrive is much more intuitive and easy to use than many other similar services. We want to push our customers to have a file stored in the cloud and not just on their computers." Symix will be enabling ShareFile for its clients with the next version of its MIS360 product, due out in the second half of this year.
