Swallowing is initiated by central neural signals, which in turn are influenced by cranial and somatic sensory input. To evaluate the influence of oral cavity depth on tongue movement, we investigated tongue movement in 21 healthy adults. The subjects were divided into the following three age groups: 20-30, 50-60 and 70-80 years old. Surface electromyography was used to record bilateral and lingual muscles during swallowing of water. Tongue movement was significantly greater in subjects with a shallower oral cavity. This was particularly true in older subjects, who had a lower frequency of pharyngeal closure and a slower lingual movement. The results suggest that a shallower oral cavity may be related to swallow dysfunction in older subjects./* *
