Apache Hadoop is a map-reduce framework from Apache founded in 2009. The big idea behind Apache Hadoop is the distributed processing of big data. The first Apache Hadoop distribution was released in 2010 as the 0.20.0 version. Hadoop was created as an open source project hosted by Apache organization in 2010 and started release in February 2010. Hadoop is a Java-based distributed file system for large datasets. Apache Hadoop's job scheduling and partitioning capabilities makes it flexible and robust enough for big data management, providing the data-intensive and real-time analytics over distributed and hybrid data. It is the first real-time distributed-computing framework, and is a good match for various real-time processing and time-series analysis applications. It consists of a resource manager (YARN), a distributed filesystem (HDFS), and additional APIs for data pre-processing, data mining, and visualizations. Apache Hadoop provides a shared-nothing architecture that is hardware-independent and software-compatible with Google MapReduce. The components are distributed across different machines to
