Forget about the sequels, Nemo's adventure is just over 2 hours long, so it's a great movie to see twice. I think Finding Nemo is Pixar's best. I agree with all the other reviewers; it's a winner. I can't help but ask myself, if the parents of these kids were in front of the screening room, wouldn't they notice their kids getting up with a loud slurp and go see what happened. Then, they watch the scene with all of them underwater and start screeching: "Nemo! Nemo! Nemo!!! What the...?" And you can't blame them, after all, the kid's parent are never around. If only that would happen with my son! This one is easy to recommend, especially since it's the third film of a long-running series by Pixar. There are no less than three kids (Nemo, Dory, and Marlin) who populate this film, and the first two are kids you have met before. The dialogue is simple, the story is fun and the animation is excellent. All I needed to know was that this movie is right for me. It should be noted that a Pixar classic is much more than just dialogue: it can be an entertaining, clever and moving story in addition to being visually attractive. Finding Nemo ranks among the best of its kind. Pixar has done it again, they took their winning formula for The Incredibles and outdid themselves with Finding Nemo. No, the only thing the film is missing is a sense of humor, and that may have something to do with the fact that it's an animated feature. My 9-year-old son, who knows exactly how to ruin a good movie, loved the film and even said it reminded him of some of his funnier family members. However, two of the adult-aimed sequences in the film (a Vomit Inducing Scene and a the Whale's Passing of Blockbuster Video, which upset both of my kids) may not be the best choices for the younger set, although it's hard to see how the first could be blamed on the company. Overall, this film is a winner for the entire family! It's easy to see why Pixar has become so popular. Once you see this film, you'll be impressed once more by the quality of these animated features.
